

Abstract

The present invention relates to an injection moulding device for foamable materials, in the case of which the admixed foaming agent is dissolved in the material inside a pressure chamber and which is characterized in that the pressure chamber is formed between two plungers which are adapted to be axially displaced in the interior of a pressure cylinder.